

Armistice Favors the Patient

A Totally Inappropriate Expansion for BattleTech

The year 3052 marked the close of the Clan War, the setting for the BattleTech TCG main set and the Counterstrike expansion. The legendary Natasha Kerensky and Hanse Davion have faded into history, and Twycross and Luthien are only distant memories. Now the characters of the BattleTech universe are about to experience something they've never known before: peace.

And so will you! Late last winter, Glenn Elliott, Shawn F. Carnes, Paul Peterson, and Mike Selinker began work on Armistice, the new expansion for BattleTech, subtitled "3053: The Clans Go Home." Originally titled BattleTech: Get The Hell Off My Lawn!, Armistice reengineers those gigantic battle tanks to useful implements of society. Former Mechjocks take worthwhile positions as schoolteachers and lumberjacks, while munitions works are converted to bicycle factories.

Now, fresh from the horrors of universe-wide war, your BattleTech decks can take some much deserved R&R. Cool off those jump jets and kick back with a lemon spritzer. Hurry up and wait.

Experience the quiet. Experience the retraining. Experience...

This spoof has been brought to you by Glenn Elliott, Shawn Carnes, Paul Peterson, and Mike Selinker, who wanted to focus on the tension-filled zeitgeist of peacetime in BattleTech, featuring the myriad MechWarriors of the Inner Sphere and Clans when they're not busy walking around in giant robots tanks.
